Birds Globally, Birds Locally

Birds delight our eyes with their beauty, challenge our minds and fire our imaginations with their powers of flight and migration, and even gratify our taste buds. Humanity's basic fascination with birds remains strong, as the recent successes of the films Winged Migration and March of the Penguins attest. There has been an explosion of interest in bird watching, bird feeding, and landscaping to attract birds. Even the mass media present hopeful stories of the possible rediscovery of the ivory-billed woodpecker, but also warn of the decline of the red knot and the spread of bird flu. Clearly, birds have our interest.

Join author and ornithologist Jeffrey Gordon as he looks at birds from a local and global perspective, sharing the amazing, the beautiful, and the bizarre. Jeff's program will be illustrated with photographs and video from his travels around the world, but will also focus on the lives of birds right here in Delaware, and how each of us can increase our enjoyment and appreciation of these amazing creatures.
